

This website is here to help. Here, you can find out basic information about your health information privacy rights, including:

- when you can block people from seeing your health information
- how the privacy laws in&nbsp;B.C. work
- where personal health information flows within the health system
- what health care providers in&nbsp;B.C. are allowed to do with personal health information.

You can also find out about Pharmanet and the B.C. government's plans for electronic health records.

We have included a form and a brochure that you can print up.

If you are interested in learning more about health information privacy issues in B.C., check out the Resources page.

This website is non-partisan, funded by the Law Foundation of British Columbia as a public education project, and managed by the B.C. Freedom of Information and Privacy Association.

This website contains basic information and general guidance only and does not constitute legal advice. If you have a specific question about a problem you believe is a legal problem, it is best to consult a lawyer.